Some Men You Know. In the Great Potato Contest conducted by the American Agriculturist, the following farmers competed, some of whom may of the readers of this paper probably know. The crops named are single yields grown on single acres, but no subterfuge as raising two crops from one acre during the season being permitted. These farmers used the STOCKBROKER POTATO MANURE exclusively, without other dressing, and obtained it from our usual stock agents' hands, in the country.

In dairy society, this reply to a question about the future of the institute adds as much concern as commonly grown was not worth anything any way, grown or dry. To have good fodder from persons it should be planted so it can produce its growth and gain some profit.

No, thank you. Maine tried the silk business years ago and learned all the坑. When we have a peasant population seeking work at ten cents a day will be time enough to introduce silk culture.

Jersey cows for the milk man are growing in favor each year. Good rich milk is more appreciated as it becomes known among consumers, while the deeper milked cows of this breed now so common, are growing in favor with the farmer who keeps and milks these cows and does not give a remarkable show on coming fresh in milk, yet her staying qualities are such that in her year's work she makes a satisfactory record. The strong frame, buttery Jersey is a good cow for milk, butter or cheese.

The Director of the New Hampshire Experiment Station has been comparing, the past year, the dairy work of cows of the different breeds, and with results as shown in the following table:

The Canadian horticulturist forbears an example of the influence of prejudice on the quality of fruits. The words of Mr. Rivers are quoted where he said that before long "suppliers of their markets would be well supplied with apples of good quality (and good grown)" that their very good friends, the Americans, would be compelled to consume their own fat, tasteless and woody Baldwin among other varieties; that the apples of the English. So far much progress has not yet been made in the improvement of English fruit, as it is not long since fine Baldwins from America sold at about double the price of English varieties.

The time is at hand when the officers of the county agricultural society will be laying out their work for another season. By way of suggestion, we wish to call attention to some points in their management which have been forced upon our attention. The first of these is the small amount of money paid in trotting purses by many societies, as compared with that expended for the promotion of general stock interests. A desirable success of a county fair, and for this reason may well receive due attention. But it is proving true that in some cases, at least, it appears that the money paid in trotting purses in payment of a general exhibition, the races have come to be the exhibition, and the show stock and products a side affair and small affair. It is a pity that the question whether any other cause than the trotting command more than the share of it.

his occupy a middle ground between these extremes. While it of course is known that the State has charged counties the horse tax, it is not known whether the tax is levied upon the horses, or upon the owners, or upon the owners that with some societies the horse tax is the main thing. This is plainly apparent from the new societies, Kennebec south and the Androscoggin north, which have no prohibition under their incorporation by the Legislature last fall, at least so far as present law is paid to show their work. Without doubt, the State is not without tax, but it certainly is well for owners to know to what extent this part of the exhibition should absorb the funds of the society.

Another feature of the management which has forced itself upon the notice in visiting fairs in different counties and to which we could call attention at this time, is the holding a three days' show, the usual practice being to hold the first day an exhibition day for cattle, yet a separation day only for the other parts of the exhibi-

the public will not attend to that day for the fair. There is little to see. People go to the fair for the exhibition, not the cattle alone. The second day, with the show ready to see, as the husband and wife and boys are all there, but the cattle are not there, the conclusion of no interest in cattle.

The Oxford society, whose marked success was referred to in our columns a few weeks since, has adopted the same plan of management to which we would call attention. Certainly it is important that the value be given an opportunity to be benefited from seeing and examining the cattle. The thing then to do is to have the cattle exhibition when the people are there.

With the Oxford society the first day is only a day of preparation in any department. Cattle drive in on the second day, and the county comes on in on that day and remain all night. Horses and colts come in the same manner. For the several days of the county fair.
